' 2026 Morning Update • Boca Raton Morning Briefing • Tue, 06 Oct 2026 08:59:23 GMT • 5:53

Maya: Good morning, Boca Raton, and welcome to your Tuesday, October sixth, twenty twenty-six morning briefing. I'm Maya.

Devon: And I'm Devon. Tuesday morning is here, the week is picking up speed, and we've got a full look at your week ahead, your coastline, tonight's sky, what's happening around town, and the local stories you need to know.

Maya: Let's start with the weather, because this is one of those South Florida weeks that keeps you guessing. Today, Tuesday, we will reach a high of eighty-seven degrees with an overnight low near seventy-six. Rain chances are modest, around thirty percent, and winds are gentle at about ten miles per hour. Not a bad Tuesday at all.

Devon: Enjoy it while it lasts, because Wednesday turns much wetter. The high dips a bit to eighty-four, the low stays near seventy-six, but rain chances climb to about seventy-six percent, with heavy rain possible. And hold onto your hat: winds gust near twenty-five miles per hour.

Maya: Then Thursday is the stormiest day of the week. High of eighty-nine, low of seventy-seven, rain chances around ninety percent, and thunderstorms in the picture. Winds near fifteen miles per hour. If you have outdoor plans Thursday, have a backup.

Devon: Friday starts the turn back toward better weather. High of eighty-eight, low of eighty-one, rain chances near fifty-two percent, with winds around twelve miles per hour.

Maya: And the weekend looks warm and familiar. Saturday brings a high of eighty-seven with a low of eighty-three, rain chances about fifty-two percent, and a chance of an afternoon thunderstorm. Winds near seventeen miles per hour.

Devon: Sunday, a high of eighty-eight, a low of eighty-two, rain chances about forty-seven percent, and winds near fifteen miles per hour.

Maya: And looking into next Monday, a high of eighty-nine, a low of eighty-two, and rain chances easing back to around thirty-five percent. So the pattern is clear: a decent Tuesday, a very wet and windy Wednesday through Thursday, and then warmth and slowly drying skies into the weekend. Keep the umbrella and the raincoat handy midweek.

Devon: Out on the water, coastal conditions are calm today. Waves are running about one foot along the Boca coast, and the water temperature is a very warm eighty-six degrees. Nice boating weather this morning.

Maya: But heads up, boaters. The seas build midweek, with waves up to about three feet Wednesday and Thursday, right when those storms roll through. Plan any offshore trips for today or wait for the weekend.

Devon: Now let's talk about tonight's sky. The sun sets at seven-oh-one this evening.

about forty degrees up, bright and steady. If you have binoculars or a small telescope, it's a great night to look for it. No notable space station passes over South Florida tonight, though.

Maya: Let's get to arts and entertainment, and the weekend calendar is filling up nicely. On Friday night, October ninth, the Atlantic City Boys bring their tribute to the Seasons Band to the Boca Black Box, with the show starting at seven-thirty in the evening.

Devon: Then on Saturday, October tenth, singer-songwriter Edwin McCain takes the stage at the Funky Biscuit at seven in the evening. You know him from those mid-nineties radio hits, and it's an intimate room, so it should be a great night.

Maya: And if you want a little romance with your Friday or Saturday night, Meat Market Boca offers live music under the Veranda from six in the evening on both nights. Dinner starts at five, music at six. An elegant evening out without leaving Boca.

Devon: Now to local news, and the first story is a big one for the sports crowd. Boca Raton is about to become home to what developers say will be Florida's largest indoor pickleball and padel club. Boca Paddle by CityPickle opens on November eighteenth, and it is a one-hundred-thousand-square-foot luxury racket club with twenty-five courts, including sixteen climate-controlled indoor courts and a one-thousand-seat stadium court. There will also be a full-service bar and a restaurant from local restaurateur Mitchell Robbins. The club sits at West Jeffrey Street and North Dixie Highway, north of Yamato Road. And if you're curious, you can book a hard hat tour of the facility starting tomorrow, October seventh. One of the founders put it simply: Boca Raton is the pickleball capital of the world. The city is already home to seven of the world's top-ranked pickleball players.

Maya: Second story, some disappointing news for music fans. Donny Most, the actor best known as Ralph Malph on the classic sitcom Happy Days, has canceled his October tenth jazz show at the Boca Black Box due to health concerns. Most announced the news on October fourth, saying he had to cancel because of some health issues and that he hopes to reschedule soon. He didn't share further details. The show was to feature his band, Mostly Swinging, performing songs of Sinatra, Darin, Martin, and more. If you had tickets, you'll want to check with the venue about refunds or a new date.

Devon: And third, a health advisory for anyone near the water. A wastewater spill near the Boca Raton Resort has prompted Palm Beach County health officials to warn people to stay out of nearby waterways until testing confirms the area is safe. The spill entered Camino Real and reached waters connected to the Intracoastal Waterway. Residents and visitors are being told to avoid swimming or other contact with the water, and not to draw irrigation water from the impacted waterways. Officials say drinking water has not been affected, and the city is working with the state environmental department on testing and cleanup.
