' 2026 Morning Update • Fort Lauderdale Morning Briefing • Mon, 05 Oct 2026 03:06:37 GMT • 4:32

Maya: Good morning, Fort Lauderdale! It's Monday, October fifth, and this is the very first Fort Lauderdale Morning Briefing. I'm Maya.

Devon: And I'm Devon. Welcome to day one, everyone. New show, new town, same promise: your week ahead, tonight's sky, what's on around town, and the local stories that matter, all before your coffee cools off.

Maya: Let's start with the sky above us, because this week comes in two acts. Monday is a beauty: a high of eighty-five, a low of seventy-seven, only a ten percent chance of rain, and a light breeze around six miles per hour. Perfect patio weather.

Devon: Tuesday warms back up to eighty-six, but the rain chances jump to sixty percent, with winds around ten miles per hour. Wednesday is the one to watch: a high of ninety, and an eighty-nine percent chance of rain. Take the umbrella with you when you head out the door.

Maya: Thursday stays unsettled: eighty-nine degrees, an eighty-four percent chance of rain, and the breeze picks up to sixteen miles per hour. Friday finally eases off: eighty-seven degrees with a fifty percent shot of rain. And Saturday closes out the week at eighty-eight, with just a thirty-four percent chance of rain.

Devon: So the pattern is simple: a dry, sunny start to the week, then a soggy middle, then things dry back out for the weekend. And one more thing: the UV index hovers around seven all week long, so the sunscreen stays non-negotiable.

Maya: Now for the boaters and beach people, here's your one-liner from the Noah marine outlook: swells running a gentle one to two feet, and the water a bathwater-like eighty-six degrees. A lovely stretch for the water, just keep an eye on the midweek chop when those rain bands swing through.

Devon: Now let's look up. Sunset tonight is at seven oh three, and full darkness settles in around eight twenty.

Maya: The moon is a slim waning crescent, only about a third lit, and it won't rise until the small hours of the morning. That means the evening sky stays completely moon-free, which is great news for stargazers.

Devon: Saturn is the headliner tonight, climbing in the east after dark, a handsome thirty-eight degrees up from the horizon. And if you're outside at seven twenty-seven tonight, look toward the southwest: the International Space Station makes a low pass, just eleven degrees above the horizon. Find a spot with a clear view of the water and you might just catch it.

Maya: On the calendar now. First up, Oyster Fest twenty twenty-six takes over Seabreeze Boulevard this Wednesday, October seventh, starting at six in the evening.

Devon: Then on Saturday, October tenth at eight, salsa legend Tito Nieves brings his fiftieth-anniversary show to the Au-Rene Theater at the Broward Center. That's a big night of Latin classics.

Maya: Now the local news, and our first story is on the pitch. Fort Lauderdale United FC has named Aly Hassan as the club's first-ever general manager.

Devon: Hassan has been with the club since the beginning, and he'll now lead soccer operations across the whole ecosystem: the Gainbridge Super League side, the USL League One team debuting in spring twenty twenty-seven, and the club's growing youth programs.

Maya: The announcement came from the club on September twenty-ninth, with founder and chairman Tommy Smith calling Hassan a pillar of the local community.

Devon: Story two: JetBlue has launched daily nonstop service between Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport and Barranquilla, Colombia.

Maya: Barranquilla joins Medellín and Cartagena in JetBlue's Colombian network, with service to Cali set to launch later this month. The airline announced the new route on October first.

Devon: The flights run on an Airbus A-three-twenty, departing Fort Lauderdale at eleven oh five in the morning and landing in Barranquilla at twelve fifty-five.

Maya: And finally, Fort Lauderdale's brand-new police headquarters is open for business at thirteen hundred West Broward Boulevard.

Devon: The one-hundred-sixty-five-million-dollar facility replaces the old headquarters built in nineteen fifty-eight. It brings about five hundred sworn officers and three hundred civilian employees under one roof, with a real-time crime center, a forensic laboratory, and a memorial in the lobby honoring officers who died in the line of duty.

Maya: That's your Monday briefing, Fort Lauderdale. Thank you for spending your morning with us on day one of this show.

Devon: We'll be back tomorrow at five in the morning. Until then: enjoy the sunshine, grab the umbrella on Wednesday, and have a great Monday.
